Self awareness and strong use of self are critical practitioner success variables that are often more powerful than a specific set of tools. A compelling presence is a competitive advantage for coaches, consultants, and leaders. Presence is challenging to define because of its uniqueness across individuals, but, it is a decisive factor in attracting clients and inspiring others.

This highly experiential 3-day workshop is designed to address key aspects of your presence and your intentional use of self in the service of effectiveness, creativity, and satisfaction. Assessing and developing one's own presence requires the context of others. We learn about the impact of our presence only by learning what we evoke or provoke in others. Thus the creation of a safe environment, with a rigorous demand for courage and trust, is an essential component of the workshop.

The workshop uses the power of groups as a vehicle for exploring presence and use of self across levels of system: individuals, dyads, the group itself, and the larger institutional context of the group. Group configurations provide the practice opportunities that are accompanied by varied and intense feedback regarding participants' leadership styles and skills.

Who should Attend

The workshop is open to coaches, consultants, trainers, HR specialists, leaders.
